“Your courage to look risk and violence straight in the eye is the driving force for building resilience in children and youth.”

Prof. Laura Sigad

You have an opportunity to change lives, both your own and the lives of others, through a new and unique journey with Oranim College.

Are you ready to confront challenges head-on and make a real difference in the lives of children and youth at risk who are excluded? Our Online English M.Ed. Program in Inclusive Education for At-Risk Children and Youth offers a unique opportunity to enhance your professional development and make a lasting impact.

This is a special online program that:

- ◆ Combines self-reflection and personal growth alongside professional development
- ◆ Adopts a professional focused approach
- ◆ Is community-oriented with emphasis on both personal and interpersonal development
- ◆ Offers practical tools to cope with the diverse risks that youth face
- ◆ Emphasizes the role of professionals as researchers (research as means of coping with risk and marginalization in educational systems)

Overview

Many children and youth who are in need and have difficulty adapting to the standard education system have excellent potential. However, their academic achievements often lag, and they frequently experience failure. These students, classified as students at risk, represent a group whose potential is not fully realized within the existing educational framework. The system's approach towards them only partially addresses their needs and aspirations. The well-being of youth is directly affected by those around them in the circles of life: the family, the school, and peers, and requires the holistic use of interventions across all the systems affecting their lives.

We will work together to devise strategies for establishing meaningful relationships with at-risk students and their families while developing in-depth observation skills.

In addition, we will assist you in cultivating your personal and professional abilities and developing your professional identity as a professional specializing in working marginalized and at-risk students.
